"Flying Woman: The Paintings of Katherine Bradford"

The paintings of Katherine Bradford are luminous with color: Swimmers float in sapphire and cobalt seas. Supermanlike figures clad in scarlet capes jet through the midnight-blue sky. Mauve-fleshed figures shimmer on burgundy backgrounds. In an excellent show at Frye Art Museum, the New York-based painter gets a chance to glow, too. Bradford, who has been painting for decades and is now in her 80s, is finally getting her art world due. But as her daring and moving (and humorous!) paintings prove, she's consistently charted her own path — whether through milky way skies, deep waters or the art world.
